abled up with lines of the play y were doing week after next.

Backstage became a muttering ad-house. Between scenes, plays would hastily scan their cripts, and once Eda Lou, who was playing a maid in one act, got so mixed up trying to remember what she must say in the next act, when she became an entirely different character, that she missed her maid cue. On the stage, Tad and Eleanora rang in vain for the maid, and then let it pass, covering up. Eleanora had to ad lib Eda Lou's business, which unfortunately had plot action in it. That night, after the performance, everyone admitted that things were going very badly.

The fourth week, they managed to pay salaries by handing out a ten per cent cut to everyone except the stage crew and electricians who, being union help, demanded pay in full. So far, none of the four of the Boothe-Hardicke Players, Incorporated, had ken out a cent. At the last intex, they decided to stall on payment of the thear rent.

Skill in athletics-Character in business

In athletics it is not unusual for a good little man to beat a larger man, because it is skill that counts.

In business, small firms often have a credit rating as good as large ones. Character and ability of management, quality of assets, and ratio of net worth to total resources determines financial responsibility -not size alone.

The play's the thing, and the actors in it have to fit themselves not only into the parts, but into the pattern on which the play is based. Nor can one succeed in an occupation which is distant. an occupation which is distaste ful; at least, no woman can.

A FTER having discovered that you are miscast, lose no time in vain regrets, but either knuckle odwn and become not only letter perfect, but to capture the spirit of the part, or else give it up and look for something else.

ONCE, in the long ago, it was to stick through thick and thin, to stick through thick and thin, even to one's very worst mistakes. We have learned better than to commend those who make martyrs of themselves, and who persist in eccupying the bed they made for themselves, no matter how hastily and how more than the world of the matter how hastily and how more fortable it proved to be.

MRS. ROOSEVELT is undoubtedly right. We have been too preoccupied with our ewn comforts and our own con ewn comforts and our own con-cerns. We've insisted on the star's dressing room and the sclo part, even when the world was walking out en our solo and would have none of them. It's better, isn't it, to have a steady job in the chous man to be a soloist definitely out of a job heatise van nerstaed it, singing soloist definitely out of a job because you persisted in singing

UP-Calmly, without voicing word of complaint regarding hi fate, Joseph Francis Regan, 26 went to his death today on the prison gallows, thus paying the when he killed a Los Angeles police man during a theater robbery

He spent his last few hours writ ing letters, smoking cigars and eigarets and listening to a phono graph which he was permitted t ise in his death cell.

He had a good sleep Thursda night and ate a hearty breakfast He showed no signs of nervousnes he waited to die.

The trap was sprung at 10:02 ; m. and Regan was pronounced dead is minutes later.

He left 14 letters, addressed to friends and relatives, most of then in Southern California, saying he had been given "a tough deal bu there was no use talking about that now." He asked that he be rememhered as the "carefree youth you knew so well."

Regan and Jack Green were con ed of slaving Detective Lieut Hugh Crowley during the robbery of the Fox Westwood theater Jan 11 1932. Testimony at their trial showed Regan fired the shot.

Both youths claimed they mis-took Crowley for the theater manager, and said he would not permit them to surrender, but started

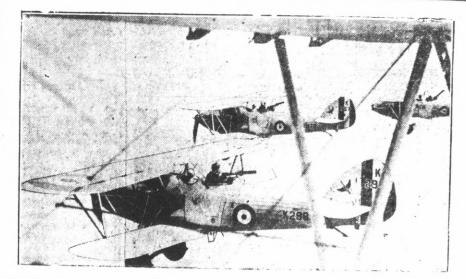

Three reprieves were granted the youths. The last extension set Regan's execution for today and Green's for Sept. 15.
